

Law Referencing Guide

Just like other sources, acts, bills, case law and other legal resources will need to be referenced.

In Australia, the Australian Guide to Legal Citation, 4th edition (AGLC4) is the main source for legal referencing.

Canterbury Institute of Management (CIM) and other universities each have adapted this style to complement the American Psychological Association Referencing Style, 7th edition (APA7) referencing style. This allows legal citations to be seamlessly integrated into your assessments, especially as in-text citations and into the APA-styled reference list.

CIM’s modified version is similar to the version by the University of Technology, Sydney (UTS). Their referencing guide can be viewed and download from their library website: <https://www.lib.uts.edu.au/referencing/apa>

AGLC4 can also be found on the University of Melbourne, Melbourne Law school website: <https://law.unimelb.edu.au/mulr/aglc/about>

The UTS and AGLC4 guides can also be found in Module 4 on the Learning Support Hub.

APA Referencing Guide

For books, journal articles, websites and other non-law resources, use APA7.

For more information, refer to the APA Referencing Guide found in Module 4 in the Learning Support Hub, on the Library website and in your Campus Library.

Pinpoint

Pinpoints are only to be used in in-text citation.

Pinpoints are used to refer to a specific page, paragraph or part of a legislation or report. They should not be preceded by 'p', 'pg', 'para' etc. Acts and bills are exempted.

Pinpoint references to paragraphs should be enclosed in separate square brackets.

..., [3]–[7].

When the pinpoint is a range, separate numbers with a non-spaced en dash (–), not a hyphen.

To create an en dash, either:

- use the shortcuts: ctrl + minus sign (-) or alt + 0150 (only on numpad) for windows or option + hyphen (-) on macs
- Copy and paste the following symbol –

For more methods, visit the article: How to insert an em or en dash in Word

See AGLC4 Rules 1.1.6 and 1.1.7 for further information on pinpoints.
